Melissa Mack is the Director of Technical Assistance of the National Family Justice Center Alliance. Melissa officially joined the Family Justice Center Alliance team in February of 2009. She received her Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of San Diego in Spanish and Media. Within her studies she focused heavily on media and intercultural communication as it relates to democracy and human rights.

Melissa has had the opportunity to study and live abroad in several countries, including Spain, France, and Argentina. In addition to her experiences abroad, Melissa's passion for women's rights came about from volunteering with the International Rescue Committee as well as interning for the Alliance during her senior year of college.

Prior to joining the Alliance, Melissa worked in Washington D.C. for Freedom House, an international human rights organization. As a Program Assistant for the Exchanges team, she facilitated professional exchanges between human rights activists in the Middle East and North Africa, and NGOs in the U.S. During her time at Freedom House, she worked with Egyptian Activists who are now interested in starting Family Justice Centers in the surrounding regions.
